✓ TOLEDO AND SEGOVIA ✓

This release reveals the salient features of two of the noblest and oldest of Spanish cities. Toledo has been called "The Spanish Rome" because of its splendid ecclesiastical history. Today it stands among the most picturesque and impressive reminders of the glorious days of medieval Spain. Almost equally remarkable in its architecture and equally appealing to the thoughtful traveler is the ancient city of Segovia which is, however, best known because of the presence there of the grandest of all Roman aqueducts—an overwhelmingly colossal work of utility dating from the days when mighty Rome was mistress of the civilized world. The monuments, churches, streets and structures of these two wonderful old cities fill out a reel of solid value and of picturesque splendor.
